FreeTheNet/VONIC is having a meeting!

Date: Wednesday, June 4
Time: 6:30pm
Place: The Vault, aka Suite 290 in the Old BC Electric Building at Pender and Taylor, right beside the Millennium Gate in Chinatown (meet outside the gate, or call 778-558-2267 or 604-628-9414 to get in)

Also, the Vancouver Open Network Initiatives Cooperative will be having its first ever Annual General Meeting on Wednesday, July 9. The location is TBD, but it will likely be either at the Vault or at SpartaCul Books.

IMPORTANT NOTE: We will need to have at least 10 members at the VONIC AGM in order to have quorum; only those who have signed up 10 days prior to the AGM will be qualified to vote at the AGM. If you are a member, please plan on attending. If you're not a member, please consider joining, either at the June 4 meeting or using our fancy online form:

Outing the corporate mainstream media

Me in Leslie Regan Shade@the new media panel.

Media Democracy Day totally kicked it this weekend at the VPL. The event was a good fit with the library, and the MDD fair - 40-community groups set up to do community outreach and promote a more accessible media system with less corporate influence - was well attended, both by intentional MDD attendees and regular library-goers. Tns has some great Flickr photos that give a sense of what the day was like as well as excellent coverage of a couple of the panels. DaveO has a good roundup here. And our fave blogger about town, MissG04, even gave it a nice little plug.

The sessions were all well attended. I went to the 5 main panels (including the one I chaired) and was totally geeked (and infuriated) by all the discussions. I particularly enjoyed the accounts of Linda Solomon of the Vancouver Observer and independent journalist Deborah Campbell. There were some good comments in my session, The Battle for New Media and Open Communication. The audience had a lot of questions for Jeff Davis of Vancouver Open Network Initiative Cooperative and Michael Tippett, of ItowPublic. Scoles offered some good commentary as both a user/producer of participatory media and an open source (Drupal) developer. Matt Thomson's closing presentation was pretty dynamic - a slick, engaging primer for those new to the complex politics of net neutrality. The day was well attended - probably well over 500 people checked out the fair, and the main panels all had over 100 audience members, at least. The after-party wasn't as well attended but Jackson 2beats was truly awesome: politics and beats - my two favourite things.

Kate thanks for the links and mention! The two panels I attended were great!
